Introduction

Aim of the strategy

Equality matters is a five-year strategy developed to increase equality of development outcomes for women, men, girls and boys across the AusAID-funded PNG aid program. It also aims to support women’s empowerment. As such, the strategy responds to, and is aligned with both Papua New Guinea’s (PNG) and Australia’s gender equality commitments.

Background

PNG is committed to gender equality through its constitution and other national and international instruments such as: its Medium Term Development Strategy, the country’s overarching plan for economic and social development; the 1979 United Nations Convention on the Elimination of All forms of Discrimination Against Women (CEDAW) and the Millennium Development Goals. This strong national and international commitment to gender equality is supported by the work of individual sectors in PNG, many of which have their own gender strategies. Also, the Government’s Department for Community Development is developing a new National Policy on Women and Gender Equality for the nation (Department for Community Development 2009). Australia is also committed to gender equality, including through its aid program. Indeed, gender equality is an overarching theme in all of AusAID’s work because focusing on this important priority brings about greater sustainable development for all.

A number of AusAID policy documents reflect this priority, in particular Gender equality in Australia’s aid program –why and how (AusAID 2007). And now AusAID is further supporting its gender commitments through the implementation of Equality matters –gender equality and women’s empowerment strategy for the PNG program.

(See Annex 3 for a gender situation analysis in the PNG context.)
How to use this strategy

AusAID staff are to increase gender equality across the aid program by using this strategy to guide their work and manage contracting arrangements. Staff should also use it to develop their own gender equality action plans.

Equality matters outlines key areas of work required and recommends actions that programs could implement to scale up the gender equality work funded by AusAID.

The strategy recognises the importance of PNG Government ownership over the direction of sector-specific work and does not override existing agreements. Rather, it aims to strengthen and build on gender equality commitments across the PNG program.

Equality matters should be used by AusAID staff when negotiating gender-equality outcomes within sectors. It is designed to be a practical and helpful tool for staff when working with partners to achieve equality in development.

Framework of the strategy

Through the PNG Commitment on Aid Effectiveness (Government of PNG 2008)\(^5\), donors are beginning to organise themselves more effectively to support government development initiatives.

This gender strategy is designed around the Paris Declaration’s five partnership commitments of aid effectiveness:

> ownership of development initiatives > alignment with partner country development priorities > harmonisation between donors to achieve development with partner countries > managing results to achieve better development > mutual accountability between donors and partner countries.

The development of the strategy

Equality matters was developed through extensive consultation particularly with AusAID staff and managing contractors. Five consultations took place, in Port Moresby and in Canberra with more than 100 participants attending and commenting on drafts of the strategy.

Development partners, Government of PNG stakeholders and key civil society groups were also consulted through the Government of PNG – Development Partners Forum on Gender.

Stocktakes of the aid program in PNG occurred in 2008 and 2009 and these, along with ongoing pilot activities conducted by AusAID’s Gender Integration Adviser during that time, were key to informing the strategy’s development.

Equality matters was signed off by the PNG Post senior management team in November 2009.
What is in the strategy?

Other sections of Equality matters are outlined below:

- Section 2 outlines the PNG Government’s gender policy consultation findings and directions.
- Section 3 highlights AusAID’s findings on the status of gender equality in the PNG program through the 2008 and 2009 stocktakes.
- Section 4 covers the strategy’s overall approach.
- Section 5 outlines the principles behind the work.
- Section 6 is the actual strategy.
- Section 7 presents the phased implementation approach.
- Section 8 covers the management framework.

Equality matters also includes annexes on related topics, including one defining gender concepts. Annex 1 is the detailed road map AusAID staff should use when developing their own gender equality action plans (as required).
Government of PNG—National Policy for Women and Gender Equality 2010–15

Background
The PNG Government’s Department for Community Development ran extensive consultations in 2009 to develop a new National Policy for Women and Gender Equality for 2010–15. Women and men in every district across the country were consulted about what the policy should contain and provided other input into its development. This section summarises the new policy.

Purpose
The National Policy for Women and Gender Equality’s main purpose is to establish a vision and framework to guide the development of laws, policies, procedures and practices to ensure equal rights and opportunities for women and men in all spheres—in structures of government as well as in the workplace, the community and family.

Policy focus

Action plan
PNG’s National Policy for Women and Gender Equality includes 10 priority areas of action:
1. law and order
2. health
3. HIV and AIDS
4. education
5. cultural norms and traditions
6. economic empowerment
7. employment
8. women in decision making
9. women and agriculture
10. environment.

Transport, infrastructure and government and provincial administrations are crosscutting matters affecting all policy priority areas.

The policy also includes a detailed action plan which the roadmap in Equality matters aligns with.
Lessons from AusAID’s gender stocktakes

The stocktakes

AusAID conducted stocktakes of work on gender equality in its PNG program in 2008 and 2009. The results informed the development of Equality matters and the increased emphasis on gender equality across the program to ensure greater sustainable development for all. The action items listed in Equality matters are based on the lessons learned from the stocktakes.

The lessons taught that positive change in the area of gender will occur in PNG if AusAID:

1. recognises and uses the PNG Government’s commitments on gender equality throughout the aid program
2. supports and works more closely with the women’s movement in PNG to advocate women’s issues
3. scales up existing gender equality work underway throughout PNG
4. resources key work to empower women in PNG
5. increases policy discussion with the PNG Government on gender equality
6. makes integrating gender equality systematic within the Agency
7. increases the gender skills of AusAID staff in the PNG program
8. manages, coordinates and communicates gender mainstreaming work more effectively
9. takes more calculated risks to achieve gender equality.

(See Annex 4 for a full list of stocktake findings.)
Gender equality— an approach to development

Equality matters uses a mainstreaming approach, which includes specific programs to support women’s empowerment. This is necessary to bring about the changes needed to create development for all.

The strategy requires AusAID staff to ask themselves three questions:

1. How might your sector, project, program and/or province contribute to gender inequalities?

2. How might gender inequality be undermining what you are trying to achieve?

3. What can you do through your work to increase equality and support women’s empowerment to benefit all?

(See Annex 5 for more information about this gender equality approach.)
Principles of AusAID’s gender equality work

Considering gender equality in AusAID’s work is best practice

Equality matters is based on these gender equality principles:

1. Gender equality is at the heart of sustainable development—without it, development will be uneven and less effective.
2. Gender equality, to achieve development for all, requires appropriate levels of resourcing.
3. Gender equality work is most effective when it focuses on the practical and strategic needs of women, men, girls and boys.
4. Gender equality mainstreaming requires special actions for women’s empowerment.
5. Gender equality needs a skilled and respectful approach, that combines individual awareness and cross cultural awareness.
6. Gender equality requires support for local initiatives, which means seeking out diverse voices.
7. Gender equality in development means working with all country partners—government, non government and business.

1 The term ‘strategic needs’ in this context refers to needs that women, men, girls and boys share at a systemic, organisational or political level, rather than immediate, practical needs like access to fresh water in a particular village. See Annex 6 for a list of gender definitions.
Strategic objective 1
Support PNG’s leadership and ability to develop and deliver policies, plans and actions to meet the needs of women, men, girls and boys

Ownership
1. Support inclusive policy, planning and implementation so women’s development needs are met.
2. Agree on and implement Partnership for Development Schedules that reflect the gender commitments of both PNG and Australia, to ensure women’s and men’s needs are fully integrated within the AusAID-funded program.
3. Support women’s leadership in PNG so decision making reflects the needs of women as well as men.

Strategic objective 2
Scale up AusAID support for PNG gender equality commitments and opportunities

Alignment
1. Align all AusAID-funded programs with PNG commitments, agreements and policies on gender equality, to strengthen outcomes.
2. Coordinate gender equality work within AusAID-funded programs, to increase effectiveness.
3. Support delivery, at government and community levels, of the PNG Family Sexual Violence strategy, to reduce gender based violence.
4. Develop and implement an economic strategy for women in PNG that covers government, community and business commitments, and increases the economic empowerment of women.

Strategic objective 3
Coordinate activities with other donors to ensure aid more effectively meets the diverse needs of women and men

Harmonisation
1. Coordinate and collaborate with development partners on gender equality plans, actions and outcomes to achieve more results.
Strategic objective 4
Manage AusAID resources more effectively to improve development outcomes for women, men, girls and boys

Managing For Results
1. Manage AusAID systems and processes to make them more equitable for all.
2. Develop and implement a communications and knowledge management plan to share lessons learned about integrating gender equality across the PNG program, and to improve skills and outcomes.

Strategic objective 5
Support greater accountability within the aid program by jointly monitoring and evaluating the impact of gender equality work

Mutual accountability
1. Improve the collection, analysis and use of gender equality data to achieve greater development outcomes for women, men, girls and boys.
2. Monitor and evaluate gender equality jointly with development partners, the PNG Government and civil society so all stakeholders understand the impact of their combined work.
Phase 1

Equality matters will be implemented in a phased approach, over five years. A summary of the phased approach is below. Successful implementation will be measured against the outcome indicators also listed below.

Phase 1 (Year 1)

> Build understanding and secure agreement in the PNG Government, and with development partners, the community sector, business partners, and donors about the strategy.
> Develop shared plans for implementation.
> Begin developing the capacity of stakeholder groups to implement the strategy.
> Establish an overarching joint monitoring and evaluation framework.
> Begin to implement the strategy.

Outcome indicators Phase 1

> Agreement on and understanding of the strategy exists within the PNG Government and among development partners, the community sector, business partners and donors.
> Implementation plans have been developed and shared.
> The capacity of stakeholder groups to implement the strategy is developing.
> An overarching joint monitoring and evaluation framework has been established.
> The strategy is being implemented.

Phase 2

Phase 2 (Years 2 to 4)

> Continue to implement the strategy.
> Share lessons learned.
> Begin to monitor and evaluate implementation, in line with the framework developed in Phase 1.

Outcome indicators Phase 2

> The strategy continues to be implemented and measurable gender equality outcomes are being seen across the program.
> Lessons learned are being shared.
> Monitoring and evaluation is taking place, in line with the framework developed in Phase 1.
Phase 3

Phase 3 (Year 5)

> Secure greater commitment of funds to enable scaling up gender equality work across the AusAID program.

> Ensure all partner groups have sustainable systems in place to enable work to continue over the long term.

Outcome indicators Phase 3

> Appropriate levels of funding have been secured for scaling up gender equality work across the PNG program and gender equality is embedded within the AusAID PNG program.

> Partner groups have sustainable systems in place and work is continuing over the long term. Government of PNG, community and business sector are all showing measurable increased ownership of gender work and continuing to progress towards equality within development.

Annex 1

Road map to equality

This Annex documents actions under AusAID-funded programs or sector activities that will increase gender equality outcomes. It also specifies in which phase activities could take place.

The activities are not intended to be prescriptive, or exhaustive. However, they are based on a sound assessment of the strengths and weaknesses of the AusAID-funded program in PNG over 2008 and 2009, captured through gender stocktakes, and the work completed or piloted within AusAID during these two years. Thus, completion of activities will increase development outcomes for all. Each sector team should therefore seriously consider them when developing their own action plans for equality. This road map to equality is deliberately detailed to ensure that the momentum built over the last two years leads to further concerted efforts to create a more equal, and therefore effective, PNG aid program.

Each section will be required to complete their own action plans for equality based on the ideas in this road map. The action plans each section prepares will be monitored through AusAID’s Annual Program Performance Reporting process (Quality at Implementation and Sector Performance Reports) and a yearly gender stocktake.

PNG’s commitment to gender equality and women’s empowerment

PNG’s National Constitution\(^2\) calls for equal participation of men and women in all political, economic, social and religious activities.

In 1987, the PNG Government endorsed a Women’s Policy\(^3\) to support women’s endeavours to make this constitutional aspiration a reality. A new National Policy for Women And Gender Equality will be finalised in 2010 and will guide PNG’s endeavours towards a more equitable society.

The PNG Government signed the United Nations CEDAW\(^4\) and ratified the Pacific Platform of Action for Women\(^5\) as a follow on from the Beijing Platform of Action for Women.\(^6\)

The PNG Government also established an Office for the Development of Women.

The Medium Term Development Strategy\(^7\) acknowledges the importance of gender equality to promote recovery and development in the country.

The PNG Government has set targets for the Millennium Development Goals\(^8\) that includes the promotion of gender equality and women’s empowerment; universal primary education and improvement in maternal mortality.

A number of sectors in PNG also have their own gender strategies, including education and law and justice. The National AIDS Council has such a strategy and others initiatives are underway, including within the National Department of Health, which is developing a gender policy, within the transport sector and within the coalition of National Agriculture and Research System Organisations.

All these initiatives demonstrate PNG’s strategic commitment to gender equality.

AusAID seeks to support these commitments through the implementation of its own Equality matters: Gender equality and women’s empowerment strategy.

AusAID’s fundamental commitment to gender equality is also evident through the policy Gender Equality in Australia’s Aid Program – why and how.\(^9\) This policy paves the way for AusAID to take action on equality through its country aid programs—on economic development, governance, service delivery and regional coordination.
Australia's commitment to gender equality and women's empowerment within the aid program

The Australian and PNG governments have signed a Partnership for Development specifically raising gender equality as a fundamental and crosscutting issue to be addressed through five initial schedules for development. These schedules focus on public sector management, transport, education, health, and development statistics. Each schedule articulates the governments' expectations for improving gender equality within each schedule.

At the same time, PNG and its development partners have all signed the PNG Commitment on Aid Effectiveness. Although the Commitment does not specifically mention gender equality, it is based on the Paris Declaration for Aid Effectiveness which highlights gender equality as a crosscutting issue.

Gender equality is also highlighted in the Accra Agenda for Action, which draws out the importance of partnerships beyond government—with civil society—to bring about lasting development changes. The Accra Agenda also emphasises the importance of public participation in setting the direction for development and ensuring diverse voices guide the process.

Gender equality is still a dream for most people living in PNG. Although the policy framework exists, it is often invisible to most working in the public sector and not used to argue the case for a clear focus on women, men, girls and boys.

The situation now in PNG—are women and men equal?

PNG ranks 124 out of 136 countries in the UNDP’s gender-related development index. Only 39 per cent of girls finish primary school in PNG and only 19 per cent start secondary school. The population is expanding rapidly but there are fewer resources to fund the education system. PNG will not meet the Millennium Development Goal to Achieve Universal Primary Education until at least 2028 unless steps are taken.

Women's leadership is weak within the PNG Government, at both administration and political levels. In all, there are less than 18,000 women, out of approximately 76,000, working in the public service and most women are in lower, less influential, positions. Added to this, there is still only one woman in the PNG Parliament.

PNG ranks 119 out of 121 countries in women's political participation. Recent economic growth in PNG has had limited benefit for women. National law and company practice commonly marginalise and discriminate against women in the extractive industry and discourage women from participating in an ownership role in other major commodity sectors such as coffee and oil-palm, despite that up to 85 per cent of farmers are women, as are most small marketers.

Prolonged effects of the global financial crisis may lead to reduced income and cash flow in the home. This could have a disproportionate effect on women as they are often responsible for feeding the members of their households and paying school fees.

The HIV and AIDS epidemic is a serious problem for the people of PNG. Gender inequality and high rates of sexual violence fuel the spread of the virus.

Gender-based violence continues to plague women in PNG. Various studies have shown that the rate of violence against women ranges from 67 per cent to 75 per cent. These figures are considered amongst the highest in the world.
The situation for women’s maternal health continues to be poor with PNG’s maternal mortality also one of the highest in the world. It has increased from 300 per 100 000 live births to 740.19

Lack of service delivery in health and education, and the lack of economic opportunities are exacerbated by lack of government coordination and delivery at a sub national level.

Significant work to increase equality between men and women is occurring across the community sector with a wealth of Non-Government Organisations actively pursuing development for all. However, this work lacks strategic impact at a political level due to a splintered women’s movement in the community and the absence of women in the machinery of government.

On a brighter note, a number of significant shifts are occurring in PNG, which AusAID is supporting. For example: moves are afoot within the PNG Government to establish a well-placed Office for Development of Women; a new government Gender Equality and Women’s Empowerment policy is being developed with strong community participation; reserve seats for women in Parliament may well be a reality by the 2012 elections; and the increasing emphasis on decentralisation and service delivery is creating unique opportunities for the aid program to more effectively deliver outcomes for all.

Annex 4

List of stocktake findings

The stocktakes

In 2008 and 2009, AusAID conducted stocktakes of its work on gender equality across the PNG program. The findings underpin the Equality matters strategy and suggest ways forward.

This Annex documents the major themes that emerged from the two stocktakes.

Findings: strategic issues

> Gender equality work occurring across the program is largely peripheral.
> High-level policy forums between PNG and Australian officials have more success in mainstreaming gender within sections.
> Although most strategic documents within PNG and the AusAID program refer to gender equality, very often, government officials, AusAID staff or advocates within the community, do not use these to inform or influence their work.
> A perceived level of risk is associated with discussing gender equality between AusAID and PNG country officials and this inhibits implementation.

Findings: capacity within the AusAID program—sector issues

> The amount and quality of gender activities vary greatly. Accountability increased from 2008 to 2009—including better management from AusAID—resulting in an increase in gender equality work.
> Very little work is underway within the economic development sphere or on climate change, and these are problematic gaps.
> Approaches that combine practical outcomes with strategic outcomes are more successful, as demonstrated within some programs.
> Programs that allocate finances and skills to gender equality are more likely to succeed.
> Over time, with resources and skills, a critical mass of opportunistic gender-equality work can build and make a positive difference.
Findings: capacity within AusAID’s internal management issues

- Programs that are newer, allocate funds and have clear pathways for gender equality. These are more likely to succeed in making a difference.
- Much of the good work on gender equality already underway is driven by effective individuals with a personal influence, rather than through strategic mechanisms.
- Equity within the adviser pool is an issue, as is the lack of gender equality skills of advisers.
- Cultural barriers within the AusAID program and in the PNG context impede progress.

Capacity within the PNG Government

- Lack of a strong gender policy framework, or lack of adherence to the gender policies that exist, makes it harder for AusAID to allocate specific resources to increase gender equality.
- The lack of activity occurring within the PNG Government reflects the absence of women’s voice; both in administration and in the political arena.

Findings: capacity within the civil society sector

- The bulk of gender-equality work underway in AusAID’s PNG program is occurring within the community sector. However, this is disjointed and lacks impact within the public sector, at a strategic level within PNG and within the aid program.
- The diversity of work occurring at the grassroots level demonstrates that gender equality work gets stronger closer to the ground where women are more likely to participate.
Gender equality— an approach to development

This strategy uses a mainstreaming approach, and a specific programming approach, to support women’s empowerment. Both are necessary to bring about beneficial gender equality changes for development. Mainstreaming alone will not achieve the necessary results since it relies on prioritising existing funds already allocated to other important priorities. New funds, allocated directly to some specific programs, are essential to scale up the work underway in the PNG program.

The Commonwealth Secretariat (1999) defines mainstreaming as:

An approach that situates gender equality issues at the centre of broad policy decisions, institutional structures and resource allocations, and includes women’s views and priorities in making decisions about development goals and processes.

This gender equality strategy adopts the position that AusAID staff will be expected to analyse their work on this basis.

In addition, this strategy acknowledges the fundamental importance of women’s empowerment to achieve development for all. The Commonwealth Secretariat defines this as:

Women’s empowerment is the goal and the process for women’s advancement. The process by which women mobilise to understand, identify and overcome gender discrimination so as to achieve equality in welfare and equal access to resources.

Women’s empowerment requires both a mainstreaming approach and specific attention to resourcing and support of women’s own efforts to achieve equality. Specific efforts for women’s empowerment are complementary to mainstreaming gender equality.

Three questions to ask in the mainstreaming process are:

1. How might your sector, project, program and/or province contribute to gender inequalities?
2. How might gender inequality be undermining what you are trying to achieve?
3. What can you do through your work to increase equality and support women’s empowerment to benefit all?

Equality matters acknowledges that it is impossible to bring about development unless gender equality is central to the process.
Annex 6

Management arrangements overall

The Chief of Operations is responsible for the management of Equality matters.

The strategy will be coordinated by the Policy and Program Coherence Section of the PNG Post. The First Secretary will work with AusAID staff on implementing and monitoring and evaluation of delivery. The strategy will be supported by a full-time AusAID PNG Gender Adviser, who will provide advice and assist with roll out and monitoring and evaluation.

Staff will be expected to develop action plans for each phase of the strategy and these will include work agreed to under existing sectoral gender strategies.

Reporting on implementation will occur through the Annual Program Performance Review (that is, Quality at Implementation and Sector Performance Reports). These will be supported by a yearly gender stocktake which will also encompass managing contractors.

Staff responsibilities

As gender is mainstreamed through AusAID’s PNG program, each sector is responsible for integrating gender in activities. This includes responsibility for:

> raising gender in high-level policy discussion > managing Implementing Service Providers to achieve gender equality outcomes > managing AusAID staff and systems to ensure gender equality is integrated across the program > implementing AusAID policy on gender equality and the gender strategy > monitoring, evaluation and reporting on gender equality.

Policy and Program Coherence, which acts as a central focal point for gender equality in AusAID’s PNG program, will be:

> building capacity on gender equality within AusAID’s PNG program > providing technical advice > coordinating briefing and reporting on gender equality and violence against women, in collaboration with the Policy Coordination section > providing links between the AusAID Canberra Gender Unit and other regional AusAID programs > supporting cross-sectoral gender activities within the PNG Government that do not fit within a specific sector (for example, the PNG Government’s gender policy) > supporting donor harmonisation through the gender thematic group > managing the implementation and monitoring of this gender equality strategy > increasing coherence of approach to gender equality in AusAID PNG’s program.
The role of AusAID Canberra’s Gender Section will be to ensure gender equality objectives become an integral part of the Australian Government’s aid policies, programs and initiatives.

Specifically the Gender Section undertakes to:

- develop policy on gender and coordinate this policy
- monitor progress toward gender integration in the Australian aid program
- build internal capacity, within the Australian development program, to enable it to apply gender integration principles and lessons learned
- raise gender awareness
- advise on how to effectively integrate gender into country and regional strategies and performance frameworks, as well as into program design and implementation
- conduct gender research.

Coordination

Effective coordination is essential to enhance opportunities and capitalise on gender activities. It also enables good practice to be shared and gender networks to increase and flourish. Effective coordination supports the development of a women’s network at all levels of society and government and it creates a coherent critical mass of efforts on gender equality and women’s empowerment. Finally, effective coordination helps avoid risks, including having AusAID-funded programs and projects contradict or conflict with each other.

Coordination mechanisms relevant to the Equality matters strategy include:

- The PNG Government’s Development Partner Forum on Gender, which includes representatives from the government itself, the National Council of Women, AusAID and development partners. The Forum is co-chaired by the Minister for Community Development and the United Nations Special Coordinator. It is attended by Heads of Agencies.
- The PNG Program Gender Advisor Network, chaired by AusAID’s PNG Program Gender Advisor and attended by all AusAID PNG Program Gender advisers.
- The Chief of Operations Advisor Network, which includes the AusAID Gender Advisor, Education Advisor, Health Advisor, Law and Justice Sector Advisor, Capacity Development Advisor and HIV Advisors.
- AusAID Gender network, which is led from Canberra.
- General workshops and meetings in the PNG program as required.

To further enhance communication and coherence in AusAID’s PNG program, year one of the Equality matters strategy includes development and implementation of a communication and knowledge management plan.
Annex 7

Engender—To integrate, incorporate or consider the gender perspective in development initiatives.

Gender—Refers to culturally-based expectations of the roles and behaviours of males and females. The term distinguishes socially constructed roles from biologically determined aspects of being male and female. These attributes are shaped and determined by culture, context and time. Gender roles and responsibilities are not fixed and are constantly changing. In most societies gender roles and responsibilities play a critical part in determining the:

- type and amount of work performed by women and men, including paid and unpaid work in the home, family and community
- access and control that women, men, girls and boys have over resources and services, and the benefits these bring
- opportunities, rights and entitlements enjoyed by women, men, girls and boys
- degree to which women, men, girls and boys are allowed to participate in leadership and decision making.

Gender Action Plan—This is a systematically designed set of programs, activities and projects with clear objectives for addressing gender issues, as well as appropriate strategies and activities with monitoring and evaluation indicators. It is a blueprint of how an organisation can achieve gender responsiveness. It includes a set of interventions designed to transform gender blind organisations into ones that have a gender perspective. It is an instrument that makes all aspects of an organisation and its work gender responsive.

Gender analysis—Gender analysis is a specific form of social analysis that requires sex-disaggregated data to be collected. Analysis of this data allows a gender perspective to be incorporated into planning, implementing and monitoring. Incorporating a gender perspective into activities involves applying gender analysis throughout the activity cycle. Key issues analysed may include: 1) the gender division of labour; 2) access to and control over resources and the distribution of benefits; 3) social, economic and environmental factors that influence all of the above; 4) changes in gender relations and decision-making capacity.

Gender awareness—The ability to identify problems arising from gender inequality and discrimination, including problems which may not be immediately obvious or problems which, over time, may have become accepted by particular groups as the norm or status quo.

Gender blind—Refers to policies, activities or workplace processes which intentionally or unintentionally do not consider gender as a factor.

Gender equality—Refers to equality between women and men, and girls and boys. This translates as these groups enjoying the same status, conditions and opportunities for realising their potential to contribute to the political, economic, social and cultural development of their countries. In the development context gender equality is an important political, economic, democratic and social issue.

Gender equity—Refers to fairness in access to resources and in the distribution of benefits from development, according to the different needs of women, men, girls and boys.

Gender mainstreaming—A set of processes and strategies aimed at ensuring that gender issues are recognised on a sustained basis. It is an approach that situates gender equality issues at the centre of broad policy decisions, institutional structures and resource allocations. It includes women's views and priorities in making decisions about development goals and processes. Typically, gender mainstreaming includes an assessment of the implications for women and men of planned government actions, such as policies, legislation, programs and projects. However, gender mainstreaming is also a strategy used to integrate women's and men's concerns and experiences in the design, implementation, monitoring and evaluation of policies, programs and projects in all political, economic and social agendas.

Gender management system—A network of structures, mechanisms and processes put in place within an existing organisational framework, like a government department, to guide, plan, monitor and evaluate the process of integrating gender equality considerations into all areas of an organisation's work, with a goal to achieve greater gender equity and sustainable development.3

Gender responsive—The consistent and systematic attention given to the differences between women and men in society, with a view to addressing structural constraints to gender equality.

Sex disaggregated data—Data that is collected and presented separately on women and men—namely, the counting of women, men, girls and boys separately when gathering information. Without accurate data women may become invisible, and so will their different needs.

Social inclusion—The process of ensuring that all people in a society feel valued and have their differences respected and their basic needs met so they can live in dignity. Social exclusion is the process of being shut out from the social, economic, political and cultural systems that enable the integration of a person into their community.

Women's empowerment—Refers to individual or collective action by women who have historically experienced, and continue to experience, obstacles such as discrimination brought about by inequality based on sex. Women's empowerment is the goal and the process for women's advancement. It is the process by which women mobilise to understand, identify and overcome gender discrimination so as to achieve equality in welfare and equal access to resources.
